SENT BY EXPRESS.

Marian Harlan was alone in the world—her mother just buried. She was a beautiful, brown-haired girl, with soft, shy eyes of violet gray, and rosy lips compressed to a firmness beyond her years. For after all she was scarcely seventeen, and so Deacon Gray was telling her, as she sat by the fire, spreading his huge hands over the tarry blaze, and asked:

"But what are you going to do to earn your bread and butter, child?"
"I don't know—I haven't thought. Mamma had an uncle in New York, who—"

"Yes, yes—I've heard about him—he was mad because your mother didn't marry just exactly to suit him, wasn't it?"
Marian was silent, Deacon Gray waited a few minutes, hoping she would admit him into her secret meditations; but she did not, and the deacon went away home, to tell his wife that "the Harlan gal was the very queerest creature he ever had come across."

In the meanwhile Marian was busy packing her few scanty things into a little carpet-bag, by the weird flickering light of the dying wood fire.
"I will go to New York, she said to herself, setting her small pearly teeth firmly together. "My mother's uncle shall hear my cause pleaded through my own lips. Oh, I wish my heart would not throbb so wildly! I am no longer meek Marian Harlan, I am an orphan, all alone in the world, who must fight life's battles with her own single hands."

Lower Broadway, at 7 o'clock in the evening! What a babel of crashing wheels, burying humanity, and conglomeration noises it was! Marian Harlan sat in the corner of an express office under the glare of gaslight, surrounded by boxes, and wondered whether people ever went "orized in this perpetual din and tumult. Her dress was very plain—gray poplin, with a shabby, old-fashioned little straw bonnet tied with black ribbons, and a blue veil, which her only article of baggage, the carpet bag, lay in her lap. She had sat there two hours, and was very, very tired.

"Poor little thing!" thought the dark-haired young clerk nearest her, who inhabited a sort of wire cage under a circle of gaslights. And then he took up his pen and plunged it into a perfect Atlantic ocean of ink.
"Mr Evans."

"Sir."

"I have noticed that young woman sitting here for some time—how came she here?"
"Expressed on sir, from Millington, Iowa—arrived this afternoon."

As though poor Marian Harlan were a box or parcel.
"Who for?"
"Consigned to Walter Harrington, Esq."

"And why hasn't she been called for?"
"I sent up to Mr. Harrington's address to notify him some time ago; I expect a reply every moment."

"Very odd," said the old gentleman taking up his newspaper.
"Yes, sir, rather."
Some three-quarters of an hour afterward, Frank Evans came to the pale girl's side with indescribable pity in his hazel eyes.

"Miss Harlan, we have sent to Mr. Harrington's residence—"

"And we regret to inform you that he sailed for Europe at twelve o'clock this day."

A sudden blur came over Marian's eyes—she trembled like a leaf. In all her calculations she had made no allowance for an exigency like this.

"Can we do anything further for you?" questioned the young clerk, politely.

"Nothing—one can do anything now!"
Frank Evans had been turning away, but something in the piteous tones of her voice appeared to arouse every manly instinct within him.

"Shall I send to any other of your friends?"
"I have no friends."

"Perhaps I can have your things sent to some quiet family hotel?"
Marian opened her little leather purse and showed him two ten-cent pieces, with a smile that was almost a tear.

"So young, so beautiful and so desolate! Frank Evans had been a New Yorker all his life but he had never met with an exactly parallel case to this. He bit the end of his pen in dire perplexity. But what are you going to do?" I don't know, sir.

Isn't there a work house, or some such place I can go to until I could find something to do?"

They are putting out the lights and preparing to close the office, said Marian, starting nervously to her feet.
"I must go—somewhere."

"Miss Harlan," said Frank, quietly, my home is a very poor one—I am only a five hundred dollar clerk—but I am sure my mother will receive you under her roof for a day or two, if you can trust me."

"Trust you?" Marian looked at him through violet eyes obscured in tears. Oh, sir, I should be so thankful!

"How late you are, Frank! Here—give me your overcoat—it is all powdered with snow and—"

"Hush, mother; there is a young lady down stairs."
"A young lady, Frank?"
"Yes, mother; expressed on from Iowa to Harrington, the rich merchant, he sailed for Europe this morning, and she is left entirely alone. Mother, she looks like poor Blanche, and I knew you wouldn't refuse her a corner here until she could find something to do."

Mrs. Evans went to the door and called cheerfully out:
"Come up stairs, my dear—you're welcome as the flowers in May; Frank you did quite right; you always do."

The days and weeks passed on, and still Marian remained an inmate of Mrs. Evans' dwelling.

"It seems just as though she had taken our dear Blanche's place," said the cozy little widow; "and she is so useful about the house. I don't know how I ever managed without her."

"Now, Marian, you are not in earnest about leaving us to-morrow?"
"I must, dear Mrs. Evans. Only think—I have been here two months to-morrow, and the situation of government is very advantageous."

"Very well. I shall tell Frank how obstinate you are."
"Dearest Mrs. Evans, please don't—please keep my secret."

"What secret is that that is to be so religiously kept?" asked Mr. Frank Evans, coolly walking into the midst of the discussion, with his dark hair tossed about by the wind and his hazel brown eyes sparkling archly.

"Marian!"

"I must, Frank; I have no right further to trespass on your kindness."

"No right, eh? Marian, do you know that the old house has been a different house since you came to it? Do you suppose we want to lose our little sunbeam?"

Marian smiled sadly but her hand felt very cold and passive in Frank's warm grasp.
"You'll stay, Marian?"

"No."
She shook her head determinedly.

"Then you must be made to stay, said Frank. "I've missed something of great value lately, and I hereby arrest you on suspicion of the theft!"
"Missed something?"
Marian rose, turned red and white.

"Oh, Frank, you can never suspect me!"
"But I do suspect you, in fact, I am quite sure the article is in your possession."

"The article?"
"My heart, Miss Marian. Now look here—I know I am very young and very poor, but I love you Marian Harlan, and I will be a good and true husband to you. Stay and be my little wife!"

So Marian Harlan, instead of going out to be a governess, according to the programme, married the dark haired young clerk in Ellison's express office, New York.

They were quietly married, early in the morning, and Frank took Marian home to his mother, and then went calmly about his business in the wire cage, under the circle of gaslights.

"Yes, sir."

"Do you remember the young woman who was expressed on from Millington, Iowa, two months since?"
"Yes, sir; I remember."

A tall, silver-haired gentleman here interposed with eager quickness.
"Where is she? I am her uncle Walter Harrington. I have just returned from Paris, where the news of her arrival reached me. I want her, she is the only living relative left me."

"Ah! but, sir," said Frank, "you can't have her!"
"Can't have her! What do you mean? Has anything happened?"

"Yes, sir, something has happened; Miss Harlan was married to me this morning."

Walter Harrington started.]
"Take me to her," he said, hoarsely; "I can't be parted from my only living relative for a mere whim."

I wonder if he calls the marriage service and wedding ring mere whims, thought honest Frank, but he obeyed in silence.

"Marian," said the old man, in faltering accents, "you will come to me and be the daughter of my old age?"
I am rich, Marian, and you are all I have in this world."

"Dearest uncle, he was kind to me when I was most desolate and alone. I cannot leave my husband, Uncle Walter; I love him!"

"Then you must both come and be my children," said the old man, doggedly; "and you must come now, for the great house is as lonely as a tomb."

Frank Evans is an express clerk no longer, and pretty Marian moves in velvet and diamonds; but they are quite as happy as they were in the old days, and that is saying enough.

Miscellaneous.
Ingenious Honesty of a Hackman.

The clerk of a merchant at Osaka, Japan, went to Kioto on business of his employer, and received one thousand yen to carry back to Osaka. Having been detained longer than he expected he missed the steambath, and being anxious to complete his journey as quickly as possible, took a jinrikisha intending to travel through the night and reach Osaka before day-tossed.

On arriving at a small village a few miles from his destination, about three A. M., a man with a drawn sword stopped the vehicle and demanded the thousand yen, stating that he had seen the youth receive it at Kioto. After some demur the clerk took the money from his bosom, and was about to hand it to the robber, when the jinrikisha coolly snatched the bag and made off, leaving the vehicle, the clerk, and the robber in the middle of the road, the two latter as speechless as the former. The knight of the road finding himself foiled, departed in the direction opposite to that of Osaka, to which city the youth hastened, after abandoning his first thoughts of jumping into the river. On arriving at the house of an uncle, he acquainted that relative with his adventure, and expressed a desire to die. But he was spared, for it was discovered that the coolie, instead of running away with the money, had taken it to the police station. He was appropriately rewarded with a share of the money he had so cleverly saved.

An inquisitive chap stepped into a marble shop the other day, where Smith was about completing the sculpture of a lamb. "Did you cut out that animal?" asked the interrogation point. "Oh, no," said Smith, "the lamb has been there all the time; I only took the marble from around him—that's all."

A Brand New Dish.
We often hear of the smartness of Yankees, but the following anecdote proves that the geniuses of Chatham street are not so far behind in such matters. One of them, a peddler, was once traveling through the country when he visited the house of a thrifty farmer who had the reputation of being the meanest man unhung. The Jew being hungry, asked the farmer for something to eat, but the latter replied that he had nothing in the house, and could therefore give nothing.

"Haven't you as much as a stone to give me?" asked the peddler.
"Well, as for that matter, I calculate you can find as many stones as you like; and if you want to boil it, I won't be hard on you; I will let you boil it on my stove."

Thanking him with mock gravity, he procured the stone and placed it in a pot over the fire.

"Now," said he, "if you will bring me a quart of milk, I will show you how to make a stone pudding, one of the newest and cheapest dishes you ever tasted."

The farmer, being curious, brought the milk, which the Jew poured into the pot. When it began to boil he said:
"Now I want two cups of rice, and two eggs and a cup of sugar."

These groceries were brought by the anxious farmer, who grew more and more excited over the invention, and he watched the stranger nervously as he stirred the contents.

When the rice and stone were well boiled, the Jew emptied them upon a plate, the stone in the middle and the rice all around it. Then he strewed some cinnamon over it and quietly sat down and began to eat it, all the while praising its excellence. This he continued to do until he had eaten the pudding all up, leaving the stone alone on the plate for the farmer.

"Now, sir," said the Jew, "the next time you have nothing whatever in the house to eat and feel as hungry as I did, just boil a stone as I have and you will have a good meal. I assure you it was very fine," he added, smacking his lips, and leaving the house and its astonished owner behind.

The Deacon and His Calf.
Last Sunday, just as one of our straightest deacons was getting ready to shake the lines over his horse's back, and say "ge day," his wife happened to remember that the calf hadn't been fed. The deacon looked at his Sunday clothes, and observed that he did not deem it incumbent upon him to suffer for the negligence of others; to which the deaconess replied that such language in the presence of the children, on a Sunday morning, and from a pillar of the church, was enough to shake one's belief in the professions that had been made by the deacon. He handed the lines to his oldest boy, and climbed over the wheel, without saying a word. He went around to the front door, and took the door key from under the mat, came around to the back door, and as he was trying to put the key in the hole, the key slipped from his hand and slipped down into the mud. Finally he got into the kitchen and started for the barn yard with the milk. He set the pail down on the ground and called to the calf, but the beast whisked his tail in the air, and bellowed at him. Then he captured the animal and pulled it along by the ears and the middle of the road, the two latter as speechless as the former. The knight of the road finding himself foiled, departed in the direction opposite to that of Osaka, to which city the youth hastened, after abandoning his first thoughts of jumping into the river. On arriving at the house of an uncle, he acquainted that relative with his adventure, and expressed a desire to die. But he was spared, for it was discovered that the coolie, instead of running away with the money, had taken it to the police station. He was appropriately rewarded with a share of the money he had so cleverly saved.

The Story of an Arab.
The story of a Cincinnati newsboy who found a pocketbook containing $100, and returned it to the owner with contents intact, reached Philadelphia in good season, and was productive of considerable sensation among the street Arabs. One small boy was so affected by it that he straightway determined to see that Cincinnati boy, and go him seventeen or eighteen better. He took another small boy into his confidence, and the test of probity of character was carried into effect. Boy No. 2 dropped a well-padded pocketbook, which boy No. 1, following close behind, picked up.

Then, with a look on his face that would have done honor to Benjamin Franklin, the honest little fellow walked up to an old gentleman who was passing by, extended the pocketbook, and with trembling voice exclaimed: Take it, sir. It is yours. You dropped it just now. My mother and seven little brothers are starving, but I cannot keep it, sir, for it don't belong to me." The old gentleman looked at the boy, then pulled out his spectacles and adjusted them for a better sight. He could not sufficiently admire the man's visage of that little street wanderer, illuminated as it was with a glow of goodness and honesty.

He patted the boy on the head, and, pulling a five dollar bill from his vest pocket, handed it to him, saying: "Boy, you will grow to be a great man. Take this money for your starving family, and always remember that 'honesty is the best policy.'" Then the old gentleman hurried into the nearest lager beer saloon and opened his pocketbook. Then he began to dance around and call heaven and earth to witness that if ever he encountered that boy again he would flay him alive. And he continued to cradle until a policeman was called in to arrest him as a lunatic, and the only excuse he could offer for his conduct was that a small boy had robbed him of five dollars by giving him a pocket-book stuffed with old paper.

Great Skill in Engineering.
The Delaware Railroad runs right through Peabody's farm, just below our village, and close to the track there is a kind of a mud hole. Into this one of Peabody's horses fell, the other day, and defied every effort that could be made to get him out. While Peabody was working at the job, a freight train ran in upon the siding and stopped to shift some empty cars. The engineer noticed Peabody's trouble and finally offered to pull the horse out with the locomotive if Peabody would give him five dollars. Peabody gladly consented; and the engineer got down for the purpose of fastening a rope under the horse's belly. Just as he completed this job, the fireman, a greenhorn, got to meddling with the starting bar, and the engine suddenly gave a jerk and began to move off. In less than a minute that iron steed was proceeding down the Delaware peninsula at the rate of a mile a minute with Peabody's horse behind, slashing up against the fences, swishing down through the ditches, butting against the cross-ties and dancing and frolicking and jumping about in the most extraordinary manner. When the engine was stopped twenty-three miles below, by leaping the track, and rolling over into a gully, there was nothing on the rope but four ribs and a piece of the backbone, and these Peabody concluded not to drive home. The engineer says all he promised to do was to get the horse out, and he got it out. But Peabody somehow don't appear to be satisfied.

A case of mistaken identity took place as the cars left the Newark depot. A pretty girl, with her handkerchief up to her eyes, had seen her lover seat himself in the last seat of a car, but while she was bathed in tears, she did not see that the train had backed, and a different car stood in front of her; but presently she looked up and with a sweet smile said "good-bye darling" to an astonished and bashful young man who was sitting there, in the place where the other fellow should have been.

Max Adeler, the humorist, has married a young lady whose weight verges closely upon 200 pounds. "My dear," says he to her, "shall I help you over the fence?" "No," says she to him, "help the fence."

Pleasant Paragraphs.

A sure preventative of bad dreams—Sleeplessness.
The last performance that Sampson gave literally brought down the house.

A Day is made, a Week is lost,
But time should not complain—
There'll soon be little Days enough
To make the Week again.

"Did you ever know such a mechanical genious as my son?" said an old lady. "He has made a fiddle out of his own head, and he has wood enough for another."

"Every tree is subject to disease," said a speaker in a fruit-growers' convention. "What ailment can you find on an oak?" asked the chairman. "A-corn," was the conclusive reply.

A fashionable visitor thus addressed a little girl: "How do you do, my little dear?" "Very well, I thank you," she replied. The visitor then added: "Now, my dear, you must ask me how I do." The child honestly replied: "I don't want to know."

A boy in Monn, Iowa, was struck by lightning, and had the back of his new coat torn out, without other injury. On getting home, his father thrashed him for tearing his coat, whereupon the lad said: "Well, father, I'd rather be struck by lightning a dozen times than licked once by you!"

"See, Ethel," said an elder sister, condescendingly, "you had better come and walk in my shadow; it will be cooler for you." "You are very good, Maud," was the laughty reply, "but I have a shadow of my own, thank you."

"I don't take much interest in anything now," said a boy to a playfellow, who was invited to go to a ball match. "Why, what's the matter? You look melancholy!" "Do I? Well, I don't wonder at it, for I'm sitting here waiting for father to come home and lick me, and it isn't a cheerful business."

A gentleman who had the misfortune to lose his nose was followed by a beggar, who kept exclaiming: "Heaven preserve your honor's eyesight!" The gentleman was at last irritated by his impunity, and said: "Why do you wish my eyesight to be preserved? Nothing ails my eyesight, nor is likely to do." "No, your honor," said the beggar, "but it will be a sad thing if it does, for you will have nothing to rest your spectacles upon."

An Irish weaver, just imported from the sister isle, took to his employer in Kilmarnock, the first cloth he had woven since his arrival. His employer detected in the cloth two holes, within half an inch of each other, and told him he must pay a fine of a shilling for each hole.

"And plaze," returned Pat, "is it by the number of the holes or by the size of them, that ye puts the fine on us?"
"But the number of holes, to be sure."

"And a big hole and a small one is the same price?"
"Yes, a shilling for every hole, big or little."

Getting the cloth into his hands, he tore the two small holes into one, and exclaimed:
"By the Hill of Howth, and that saves me one shilling, any how!"

AFTER THE FIGHT.

The battle is over, the smoke is clearing away, and we can begin to see the results.

Our majority would no doubt have been greater but for the number of illegal votes that were cast for the Radical candidate by persons (negroes mostly) who had not been in the County but a very short time and whose homes are elsewhere.

We are thankful, however, that notwithstanding all the Radical tricks, we have had such a triumphant victory and have thus given a death-blow to Radicalism in this county.

A CORRECTION.

As the election is over, this article may be a little out of season, but we dislike so much to see things misrepresented that we will take the liberty of replying to an article published in the Wilmington Post (Radical) in regard to the public speaking at this place on the 30th ult.

There was quite a large crowd of both parties in town, and most of them cursing the Convention heartily, while all, except a very few, were very good natured, laughing at the absurdity of the "dam fools" of the late Legislature ordering the people of North Carolina to hold at Convention, without asking them whether they wanted it or not.

This statement and representation is either a wilful lie, or it is made by one who was not present, and therefore incapable of making out a case of facts.

"A young lawyer of Monroe, named Payne, attempted to reply to General Abbott. He was evidently a young fellow of excellent parts, and conscious that he had a bad case, and confined himself to several yams; one about a fellow who had a hornet's nest in the seat of his trousers, for the want of something else to say.

We reply by referring to the public sentiment as to the effect of the speech made by Mr. Payne. If appearances mean anything, and every body concedes that "actions speak louder than words," public sentiment was entirely with Mr. Payne, and his speech reflected the opinion of the majority of those who heard it.

We think the writer of the above must be a little "sore-headed, or he would not have handled the truth so carelessly.

The writer of the piece above quoted says, "about the 6th of August he (Payne) will find a hornet's nest about his head."

Union has gone two hundred and eighty-nine Conservative majority, and if that is what the writer meant by "hornets," they certainly are buzzing around here considerably and stinging [Radical] awfully.

Below we give the evidence of a disinterested party, the Wilmington Journal, on the speeches of Messrs. Payne, McCauley and Abbott. It shows whether or not Mr. Payne's arguments were "flimsy," and whether or not Gen. Abbott "riddled" them.

"On Friday evening last, General Abbott appeared, by appointment, at Monroe, for the purpose of enlightening the people on the subject of Convention. He was requested to divide time with the Conservative speakers, and agreed to it.

GENERAL NEWS.

Ex-President Johnson's death will be regretted by none more deeply than by the insurance companies. He was a believer in life insurance, and illustrated his faith by his acts, to an extent that is rare indeed, even nowadays.

CHARLESTON, S. C. August 5.—Ex-Treasurer Parker, against whom a verdict of seventy-five thousand dollars was recently rendered in a suit growing out of his official frauds and embezzlement, and who was in prison awaiting criminal prosecution for similar offences, escaped from Columbia jail at a late hour last night, no clue to his whereabouts, but every effort is making to recapture him.

WASHINGTON, August 1, 1875. ARKANSAS.—W. W. Wilshire, Congressman elect from the Little Rock district, has arrived direct from Arkansas. He says the cotton crop, just ripening, is the largest, by far, ever before produced in Arkansas.

Emigration to the State this year will reach, he thinks, from 100,000 to 150,000, and wild lands, which one year ago could not have been sold for $1 per acre, now bring $5 per acre.

THE BEST OF THE STATE is being provided for to a degree far beyond the expectations of the most sanguine. Politically a new era is dawned; whites and blacks, ex-Confederates and Union men have forever buried the hatchet, and politics are scarcely heard of.

THE CAREER-BAG ELEMENT in politics had been crushed out and the conservative people of that section left free to conduct their own affairs.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3. Tilton's lawyer has served notice of a new trial on Beecher's lawyers. Mr. Morris, counsel of Tilton, says undoubtedly the trial will be short, as they propose now to try Beecher for adultery.

GREENVILLE, Aug. 5.—An altercation took place here this morning, between Col. S. C. Crittenden, editor of the "Enterprise and Mountaineer," and James H. Runion, Esq., of the "Republican," on account of an offensive article in the "Republican" which resulted in the caning of the latter.

ANDY JOHNSON IS DEAD.—Andy Johnson, Ex-President of the United States was stricken with paralysis on the 28th ult., at the residence of his daughter in Carter county, Tennessee, and died on the morning of the 31st.

CROPS.—For the two weeks ending last Monday no rain fell in our county, and the weather being excessively hot, the drought equalled in severity a usual one of three weeks.

These Bitters are compounded with great care, and are, as their name indicates, the Best Stomach Bitters known. They are a sure preventive of Chills, Fever, Intermittent and all Malarial Diseases.

MONROE ENQUIRER

Local Matters

The Court House in this place is being repaired.

Work has been commenced on Messrs. W. H. Fitzgerald and M. O. Sherrill's brick stores.

We call attention to the advertisement of W. C. Ogburn, offering a valuable Dwelling House and Lot for sale.

Pleasant Grove Camp Meeting will commence on Friday night before the 6th Sunday in August.

Thos. W. Dewey, Esq., a well known Dancer of Charlotte, died in that city, of congestion of the brain, on the 4th inst.

We will publish a list of the delegates elected to Convention, with their politics, as soon as we get our list completed.

The Southern Cultivator has been received for August, and is well filled with suitable reading matter for the farmer.

We understand that it is still reported throughout the country, that Scarlet Fever and other contagious diseases are raging in Monroe.

Sunday School Pic-Nic at Prospect was, we are informed, quite a success. The crowd present was estimated at six hundred to a thousand.

Mr. Mills, Sup't Oxford Orphan Asylum, realized $55 15 from the Concert given at this place on Wednesday night last.

ALEX MASSEY was the only negro in Sandy Ridge township who voted the Democratic ticket which he did of his own free will and accord.

BIBLE SOCIETY MEETING at Tirzah Church.—We learn that the Bible Society meeting at Tirzah Church, on the 31st ult., was very interesting and profitable.

The reason that there was no collection taken up at this place at the Concert given by Mr. Mills, was that Mr. Mills said at the beginning of the exercises, "that he wished it distinctly understood, that he was not carrying the children around for the purpose of getting up money, but that the people might see what was being done for the Orphans, at the Oxford Asylum, and to cause the people to feel and take a deeper interest in that Institution."

THE PRES DE COURIER of last week says: "The Arctic Base Ball Club of this place received a challenge from the Monroe club this week, for a match game, but it seems that our Monroe friends 'sorter' backed down."

We are requested by the Monroe Base Ball club to reply to the above by saying, that the challenge was sent with the condition that the game was to have been played on the grounds of the Monroe club, which the Arctic club did not accept.

On the 28th day of July, at Monroe, Union county, Annie C. F. Cunningham, daughter of Col. James and M. E. Sinclair, aged two years, four months and fifteen days.

In the budding of her bright sunny youth before the darkness of sin had cast a shadow over her soul, God removed the little cherub to adorn that "House not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Weep, fond parents, it will ease your bursting hearts, but murmur not, remember that promise all radiant with divine love, "I am the Resurrection and the Life."

Loving parents in anguish grieve not; Your Annie is free from pain; But in the future strive to live, In Heaven your babe to meet again.

THE RESULT OF THE ELECTION.—We were in hopes that we could have given our readers the result of the election in the State by this morning, (Monday,) but in this we are disappointed.

FOR THE ENQUIRER. Mr. Editor.—We wish to give you an account of a very nice Pic-Nic we had at Mr. R. G. Blythe's Mill, in Sandy Ridge township, on the 17th ult.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE (the Lady's National) is already on our table for September, and is an unusually fine number, even of this popular periodical.
