Hogs Fattened Without Corn.

As I have made a most successful experiment in fattening hogs this season, I feel it my duty, as well as my pleasure, to give your readers the benefit of it. Early in April, I planted an acre in my extra early sweet potatoes, expressly to turn my hogs on. I also, planted two acres in chufas for the same purpose. The chufas I planted in drills two feet apart, and about a foot apart in the drills; they nearly covered the whole ground. The sweet potatoes were large enough to eat on the first of June, but I let them grow on until the first of August, when the ground was literally full of them .-Then I turned on them some forty hogs. After they had run on them some six weeks, and began to get full and lazy, I turned them on the chufas. I never saw hogs improve so fast. As I had heard old farmers say hogs must have corn to harden the flesh, I gave them about eight bushels; this is all the corn the hogs have ever had. On the 28th of November I killed them, and I have the finest meat that I ever tasted. The flesh is firm, and has a sweetness that I have never before tasted in pork; as fresh meat, it is more desirable than the tenderest turkey. The same land that I had in these sweet potatoes and chufas would not have brought more than twenty bushels of corn in all. I have long contended that we could not afford to raise corn on our poorold sandy lands to feed stock, and when I can make such meat on sweet pototoes and chutas, I would not feed on corn if I could DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE make one hundred bushels to the acre. -Chas. A. Peabody, in Farm Journal.
